

ETF Global Opportunities

Weekly analysis on US stocks, sectors, commodities and global indices.
22 January 2014

Market Overview

Our short-term-composite indicator is rising again and is not overbought. The move will likely extend to test the high from December at 82%. Therefore equity sector and index ETFs are likely to remain firm over the short-term and we remain with the trend.

Today we add longs in the NASDAQ 100, UK index fund and the regional bank ETF as they offer further upside potential. Emerging markets are still not participating in the present global rally and therefore we add a further short in this area, selling the Russia ETF.

Analysis

US Equity Indices

The NASDAQ 100 (QQQ) fund is consolidating at decade highs. With momentum still showing potential, with a non-overbought condition, we expect the rally to extend over the short-term.

The P&F relative chart filled a box to the upside yesterday to resume its uptrend.

We shall buy the QQQ on the close today. The stoploss will be at $86.75.

Chartcraft semi-log scale, Close Prices

The Mid Cap Index Trust (MDY) chart is in good shape as it rallies to new all-time highs, recorded this morning. The 14-day RSI is not overbought, so the strength should continue. Only a break beneath the rising 50-day exponential moving average would put the uptrend under threat.

US Sector Indices

The Regional Banks Index (IAT) ETF filled a box to the upside yesterday. The breakout from the 2009 through 2012 bottom formation is resuming. The next upside level to watch is round number $40.

We shall buy the IAT today. The stoploss will be placed at $32.50.

Also showing positive momentum, with further to run, is the Semiconductor Index (SOXX). The relative chart is nearing new 52-week highs as it tests resistance from 2013.

The Telecom (IYZ) fund is expected to print fresh 52-week price highs over the short-term. Like many of the sector funds, the consolidation since the start of the year has ensured a favorable momentum condition.

Other Developed Indices

The United Kingdom (EWU) fund is registering new 5 year price highs today.

The relative chart against the S&P 500 formed a higher low in December as it attempts a long-term floor.

With momentum not overbought, further upside is expected. We shall buy the EWU on the close today. The stoploss will be at $20.50.

The Singapore Index (EWS) fund is set to soon test the lows from 2013 across $12.26. It remains unclear as to whether those lows will provide support.

The relative chart is poor as it hits new five year lows. Avoid.

iShares MSCI Singapore Index Fund (EWS) 12.61 -0.09 21 Jan 2014

Emerging Indices

The Russia (RSX) ETF is likely resuming its downtrend off the October 2013 peak. A bearish technical death-cross will soon print as the 50-day exponential moving average nears a cross down through the 200-day exponential moving average.

The relative chart versus the U.S. equity market is close to a new five year low.

We shall open a short in the RSX on the close today. The stoploss will be at $29.10.

Market Vectors Russia ETF (RSX) 27.3 -0.09 21 Jan 2014

Currencies

The British Pound Sterling Trust (FXB) chart remains in good health. The 14-day RSI shows momentum in a decent field position as it turns up from neutral. Further strength is expected and that will provide a tail-wind to the long in EWU which we are opening today.

Commodities

The Agricultural Fund (DBA) is reasserting its three year price and relative downtrends. Momentum, here we have plotted the MACD, is not oversold.

The price is trending towards the June 2010 low of $22.85. We shall short the DBA this afternoon. The stoploss will be at $24.50.

Bonds

The price and relative charts for the 20+ year T-Bond Fund (TLT) have both shown improvement over the past week. The P&F relative chart reversed up to resume its base attempt and the price chart is heading towards the October 2013 peak at $108.73.
