The market collapse Friday increased the existing NYSE index losses and turned NASAQ Comp negative for the week. After new record highs that produced many buying climaxes amongst the averages and also for 495 stocks. There were only 23 selling climaxes. That certainly expand the data from a week ago which had 128 buying and 16 selling climaxes. The latest buying climax reading exceeds the weekly total from markets tops over the second half of 2013 but it not close to the reading above 850 buying climaxes from last May.

Just under 20% of the S&P 500 stocks had buying climaxes along with 22% of the NASDAQ 100 companies. There was lots of sector concentration as well and clearly many industry groupings showed signs of potential tops. Increased caution is clearly in order and if charts add another negative technical factor to the climax some profit taking should be considered. Nearly all of the selling climaxes were short sale funds with only two well know operation companies.

Remember that the website archive function allows for viewing prior data and every climax table is sortable by column headings. That allows for classification by broad index constituency, buy or sell or industry group. You can also shift the chart presentation, controlling the period over coverage and controlling the various display combinations.

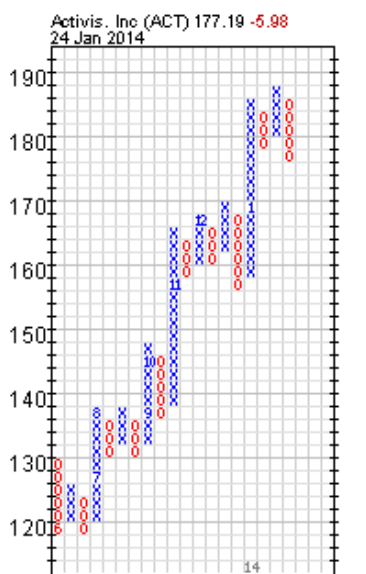

Buying climaxes take place when a stock makes a 12-month high, but closes the week with a loss. They are a sign of distribution and indicate that stocks are moving from strong hands to weak ones. Selling climaxes occur when a stock makes a new 12-month low, but then closes the week with a gain. They are a sign of accumulation and indicate that stocks are passing from weak hands to strong ones. Our work shows that sellers into buying climaxes and buyers into selling climaxes are right about 80% of the time after 4-6 months time.

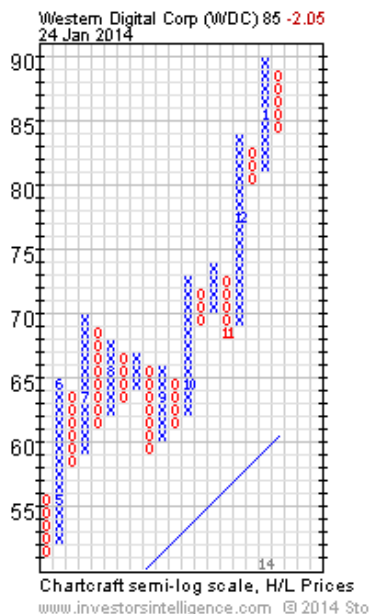

Climax Stocks

Buying Climaxes:

There was a large list of buying climaxes stocks worth commenting on so we only add a few specific examples. These chart patterns should be used as examples for others. Amongst the 93 S&P 500 stocks some of the largest advances prior to the climaxes were Activis ACT (+110.3% over the last year), E*Trade Financial ETFC (+103.0%) and Boston Scientific BSX (+94.5%). The ETFC and BSX charts both show over extended vertical rallies so watch for reversals down before considering sales. The ACT chart added a quick top and P&F sell signal to the climax so consider at least some selling if held.

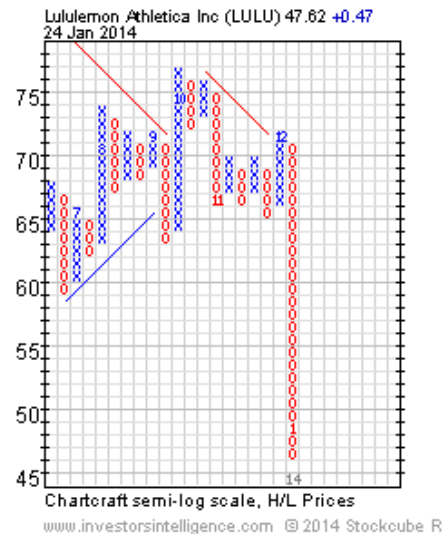

From the NASDAQ 100 the largest gains prior to the top suggestions from the climaxes occurred for Western Digital WDC (+76.0%) and Avago Technologies AVGO (+59.5%). AVGO is another case to wait for at least a reversal down on its P&F chart. WDC did retreat and its $5 drop after $9 up added a bearish high pole to the climax and reversal down. Take some chips off the table there.

Selling Climaxes:

The two better known selling climaxes were low priced stock Forest Oil FST (-47.8% over the last 12-months) and women's exercise apparel firm Lululemon Athletica LULU (-31.8%). Low priced stock climaxes are not effective due to the percentage changes needed for chart reversals up. The LULU chart shows a 25-box vertical drop to the climax so a reversal up would allow for speculative longs.
